Artist's Statement

I want to be a truly Twenty-first Century Artist. I seek creative opportunities that are collaborative, innovative, inclusive, interdisciplinary, and multi-media.

My background in both the Visual and Performing Arts allows me to think, imagine, and create in a fluid and evolving state. I want to make -- and witness! -- art that deeply examines the growing complexity of our world, and responds by inventing new ways of seeing and doing. I want to make and experience art that boldly tells stories through the theatrical languages of space and time, form and movement, light and sound, text and image. I want to create and see art that is unexpected yet connected, daringly original but deeply human. I want to invent and discover art that doesn't have one single meaning or interpretation, but exists in an extended dialogue of possibility and transformation. I want to make theatre to better understand others -- and through that engagement, come to know myself.

I want to share this process with like-minded artists. And I want to be confronted by a diversity of perspectives and opinions that challenge me to re-evaluate my own assumptions and convictions. I seek collaborators who will fearlessly bring their full, multi-faceted, contradictory identities to the creative process. I want to nurture emerging creative spirits by creating opportunities for exploration and discovery. I seek companions who cherish the journey as much as the destination, the process and the product. I want to be surrounded by fellow artists who relish enormous challenges and want to tackle creative problems energetically to find unanticipated solutions.

All plays take place in the present. That is, literally, they are apprehended by the human senses in performance only in the immediate moment. Regardless of the year in which a play is written, regardless of the time period in which the play may be set, a performance unfolds within the ephemeral mystery of the eternal present. To that end, we must ask ourselves "Whose story is being told, and how? How does this work speak to the current moment? In what ways does it ask and answer the questions that are fresh and feverish in our minds?" Plays both new and old can respond with powerfully unexpected answers.

The qualities I most look for in a performing artist are bravery, vulnerability, and generosity. Let's empower students to seize the mantle of artist and lean into the hard work. Let's insist that they be courageous in their attempt. Let's make it possible for them to be truly seen and heard in their fragile humanity. Let's forge real, lasting, and complex relationships by giving ourselves to one another with genuine empathy and compassion.

- David R. Gammons
